2018 LOCAL GOVERNMENT & IMMIGRANT COMMUNITIES SURVEY

INTRODUCTION

ICMA and Cornell University partnered on this survey to gain a better understanding of local government policies, programs, and other activities related to immigrant populations in their communities. The survey was distributed in the spring of 2018 to chief administrative officers of all municipalities with a population over 10,000 and counties of all populations across the United States. It was completed by 1,201 local governments, yielding an overall response rate of 17% with a 3% margin of error. Not all respondents answered every question.

The summary table below displays the distribution of responses by population and geographic division. Almost half of survey respondents are from communities with a population between 10,000 and 25,000. Geographically, the response rate is highest in the Mountain and Pacific regions and lowest in the Middle Atlantic.

		Number Surveyed	Number Responding	Response Rate
Overall		7,244	1,201	16.6%
Population	Over 500,000	138	20	14.5%
	100,000 - 499,999	700	115	16.4%
	50,000 - 99,999	938	130	13.9%
	25,000 - 49,999	1,638	260	15.9%
	10,000 - 24,999	3,157	530	16.8%
	5,000 - 9,999	379	80	21.1%
	Under 5,000	294	66	22.4%
Geographic Division	New England	407	62	15.2%
	Middle Atlantic	881	91	10.3%
	East North-Central	1,587	256	16.1%
	West North-Central	907	179	19.7%
	South Atlantic	987	193	19.6%
	East South-Central	551	74	13.4%
	West South-Central	798	114	14.3%
	Mountain	479	99	20.7%

Type of Government	Municipality	4,222	738	17.5%
	County	3,022	463	15.3%

KEY FINDINGS

DEMOGRAPHIC PERCEPTIONS

- The majority of respondents (71%) estimated the size of immigrant population in their community to be small or very small.
 - Immigrant populations are perceived to be growing in almost one in three of the responding local governments; nearly 60% of local governments reported little to no growth.
- Demand for low-wage workers, uniting with family members, and the success of prior waves of immigrants are perceived as the major forces for growth among local governments experiencing an increase in their immigrant population.
 - Overall, respondents perceive Mexico as the largest source of local immigrant populations, followed by Central America, and South and East Asia.

ENGAGEMENT & INCLUSION

- Despite some language-related or cultural barriers, local governments have taken steps to improve communication with immigrants in their communities.
- Almost half of the local governments provide multilingual access to their community information.
- In more than one third of the local governments, public safety officials perform regular outreach to immigrant populations. The share of local governments doing this is higher among larger communities.
- Almost one in three local governments hold community events to celebrate cultural diversity that includes new immigrants.
- Having a task force, staff position, or office for immigrant affairs is not common (11% or fewer report doing so):
 - The ratio of local governments with a task force, staff position, or office for immigrant affairs is higher among larger communities compared to the smaller ones.
 - Less than 2% of local governments reported having a local office for immigrant services.
- Most of the responding local governments are not familiar with Welcoming America's Welcoming Cities Initiative, which is a network for cities and counties welcoming and recognizing immigrants' social and economic contributions to improving communities.

SERVICES & PROGRAMS

- Almost one third of local governments are involved in providing housing assistance and health services, and the share of local governments providing these services is higher among larger communities compared to the smaller ones. However, nonprofit or faith-based organizations are the largest group offering these services to immigrants.
- Other support services, such as food pantries or child care programs, were the most commonly reported services available for immigrants in communities, and they were most often provided by nonprofit or faith-based organizations (80%). These groups are also key providers of all direct services.

- Few local governments provide programs highlighting economic opportunities related to immigrant populations (less than 15%).
- Local governments are not active in providing economic and workforce development programs to immigrants or to employers who want to work with immigrant populations (less than 12% of local governments are active in these). Mostly, nonprofit/faith-based organizations or schools/universities offer such programs.
 - Programs for employers who want to hire immigrant or minority populations and offer credentialing programs for immigrants—regardless of who delivers—were less commonly reported than other economic programs (less than 43%).

PUBLIC SAFETY & ENFORCEMENT

- Few communities (4%) reported experiencing a significant civil unrest event related to immigration, ethnic, or cultural issues.
 - Those that had experienced such an event described a wide range of examples, including events dating as far back as the Civil Rights Movement, Black Lives Matter, and immigration protests.
- Few responding local governments have enacted or even considered local policies related to illegal immigration issues.
 - A total of 7% have enacted local policies prohibiting the hiring of unauthorized workers.
 - Less than 4% have enacted a local measure providing some form of sanctuary to immigrants.
 - Less than 5% have enacted a policy to collaborate with federal authorities to share immigrant information. ■
